Operationalising Privacy in a Group

Groups face Legal, IT & Compliance challenges when operationalising Privacy

GDPR places express obligations on each and every controller and processor

Looking at GDPR just from the Group level (happens surprisingly often) is not compliant with GDPR

7 GDPR Traps for Groups

No uniformity. Each Group member follows its own path, so there's no uniform approach, reporting or understanding.

Taking a 100% Group view. Each Group member has its own obligations under GDPR, including record-keeping.

Ignoring some Group members. You say they 'don't have employees' but is that right? Are they processing personal data? Would it be an issue if they were hacked?

Disparate IT. Silos and lack of interoperability make controlled access, collaboration, and ongoing compliance difficult.

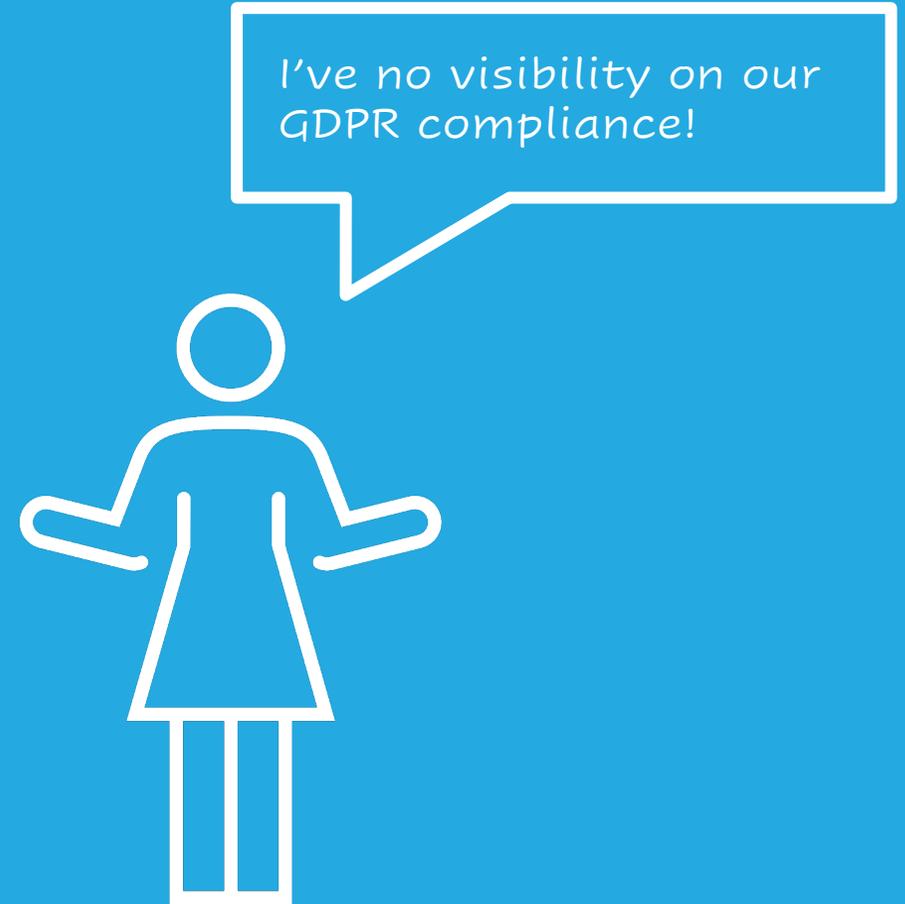

Membership changes. With no 'Group standard', it's hard to onboard new members, and how to manage Group leavers?

Security & Breach Risk. All the above compounds your risk of a damaging Security and Privacy breach with cost, PR and customer repercussions.

Wasted resources, lost opportunities. If this sounds like your Group, there'll be wasted time and cash, lost opportunities, and increased stress for those managing and owning Privacy.

'We use Keepabl to show our compliance to senior management and investors, it's all easy to see on one pane of glass. We have our yearly audit coming up soon, and we're looking forward to using Keepabl for that, too.'

'We moved to Keepabl as it's much simpler than our previous service yet better in dealing with multiple entities. It makes ongoing compliance and reporting easier, and its breach and risk modules are really excellent.'

'Reviewing the Keepabl KPIs and reports provides the information we need to ensure we are meeting requirements for data privacy management. With Keepabl, we have a more efficient way of maintaining the details and analysing risks.'

'We're delighted to welcome Keepabl into the RegTech100 for their second year running, as one of the 100 most innovative RegTech providers that senior management in Financial Services need to consider. Privacy risk is well recognised in the industry, but operational compliance and insights lag this awareness. Keepabl's solution intuitively delivers on both.'
